Operative - 312.

Farm House. Coming from the Farm House, Operative and the three women then visited the vicinity of the crab-apple tree.

While enroute from the Farm House to the vicinity of the crab-apple tree, one of the above mentioned women dropped a lady's handkerchief. Operative picked up the handkerchief and showed it to the women, and one of them said, "Why has it got an initial on it?" "Why so it has, an initial H., it must be Mrs. Hall's handkerchief, it's of good linen."

Operative from conversation with the last named woman learned that she was a very good friend of Mrs. Gibson, and knew her well. She told Operative how her husband had sold Mrs. Gibson a car, and how they had been out riding in it. While in conversation with this woman Operative learned that her husband was in the automobile business at #14 Liberty St., New Brunswick.

Operative and the women then strolled away from the crab-apple tree towards Easton Avenue. While walking along, one of the women remarked, "Oh, well we all know who did it, but they got money, and that's why nothing is done, but they will find something up around where the bodies were that will show who was there; they might find a ring or something that could be used as evidence."

While going through the old Phillips Farm House in company of the three women, Operative noticed a short Light Blonde woman with a man and an elderly woman. The short Light Blonde woman in question was overheard to remark that she was up to the house a short time after the bodies were found, and that the house was in perfect order, and that there was a half pound box of candy and several sandwiches done up in oilpaper there. Operative learned that this woman lived nearby somewhere.
